and more:

Brian Gardner has spent more than 25 years in sales and sales management in industrial markets. He founded SalesProcess360 to work with companies to improve sales processes and get the most from CRM. His new book, ROI from CRM: It's About Sales Process, Not Just Technology, was published by leading industry publication Modern Distribution Management this spring.

In the book, Brian taps his decades of industrial sales experience to provide simple yet effective strategies to get the most from customer relationship management. The book shows distributors, reps and manufacturers how to approach CRM as a system for leveraging knowledge throughout their businesses, and gain an edge with a revamped sales process.

Brian is available to present the following topics for your next sales meeting, association meeting, trade show, webinar and more. Each is available as a talk or workshop, can range from one to four hours, and can be customized to fit your audience's needs. Brian's goal is to present real-world ideas and exercises to help sales teams see the value of processes on the front end of the sales cycle.

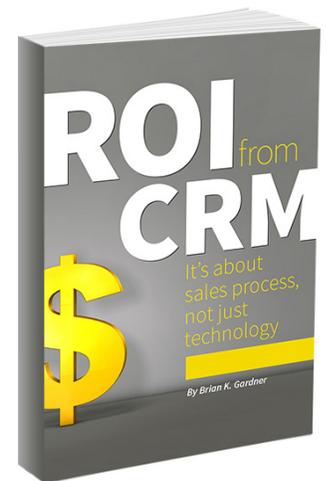

ROI from CRM

Brian will challenge attendees to rethink CRM and get the ROI they expect. CRM goes beyond just outside and inside sales. The key is to leverage knowledge across the business, including sales, customer service, management and service. This presentation and the topics it covers can be adapted for a single webinar, live speaking session or for multiple sessions.

Based on his new book, Brian will walk attendees through the SalesProcess360 CRM Audit, a simple process that includes his Sales Process Review, Sales Process Gap Analysis, the CRM Roadmap Matrix, the CRM Phased Roadmap and the CRM ROI Calculator. He will address why ROI from CRM is not an oxymoron, will define and provide examples of soft and hard ROI, and will break down the areas where you can measure true ROI from CRM. He can cover all or some of the below topics based on your audience's needs:

- Why CRM Fails (And How You Can Succeed)

Brian reviews the most common reasons industrial distributors and manufac-

“Thank you so much for your course this afternoon. This was truly amazing.”

- Chris Martin, GF, at the University of Innovative Distribution

“Brian is a dynamic presenter who really knows what he is talking about. If you are a distributor, representative or manufacturer in the industrial equipment sector, you will benefit greatly from Brian's insights on sales management and customer information systems optimization.”

- Joe Incontri, Krohne Inc.

turers may struggle to reap ROI from CRM with this easy-to-follow list based on his personal experiences and work with distributors, reps and manufacturers.

- It's About Process, Not Technology

Imagine the sales process in the 360 degrees of a circle. The back end is the quote-to-order stage. The front end includes leads and opportunities, which are where you will find the highest ROI. Unfortunately, while critical, companies tend to dedicate fewer resources to the front end. Brian will talk about why a focus on process is the foundation for maximizing ROI from CRM.

- How to Improve Your Sales Process Using a Sales Process Review and Sales Process Gap Analysis

One of CRM's primary objectives should be to improve and automate the sales process with your team, not just outside salespeople. But many companies focus CRM primarily – if not solely – on the outside salesperson. Companies who do this are missing the boat and ultimately where the ROI is with CRM. Brian will discuss how to review your current sales process and identify gaps where improved processes and CRM can bring the ROI a company seeks.

- Building a Roadmap for Getting ROI out of CRM

Brian will talk about why companies don't need to start with long specifications and wish lists when preparing to invest in CRM. Instead, he'll show how the simpler Sales Process Review and CRM Roadmap Matrix can help companies identify what to focus on first to chart a path for success.

- Which KPIs to Track in Sales and Why

Brian will challenge attendees to think about KPIs on the front end of the sales process and walk them through a process to calculate what those KPIs should be, as well as how to manage them using CRM.

- Why CRM is a Revenue Generator, Not a Cost

Many industrial distributors, reps and manufacturers tend to view any kind of technology investment as a cost. Part of that stems from the need to budget the investment, which is typically done under the eye of the CFO. Brian will challenge companies to instead view technology investments as an opportunity to grow sales and profitability far beyond the initial expense.

What is Your Competitive Edge? No, Really! What is Your Competitive Edge?

This high-energy topic will challenge and break you out of your comfort zone with industrial sales-focused discussions and exercises. Most companies' competitive edge is not what they think it is, and in most cases is actually the same as their competitors'. This presentation will center on competitive edge opportunities and processes that most companies are not focused on.

The sales-process topics that follow are set up as 30-60 minute individual talks or workshops allowing you to customize the areas that are of most interest to your group:

"Brian's seminar was on-point and really made me think about ways in which we could grow our business going forward."

- Brad Rennick, Corporate VP,
Wika Instruments

"Brian understands the challenges of industrial sales because of his extensive management experience in the field. This gives him a unique ability to explore and analyze problems and suggest solutions."

- Doug Baker, Teledyne

- Focus on the 180: Front-End Sales Management

This talk dives into the sales cycle and challenges you to ask yourself: Where is most of your energy spent? The front or the back end of the sales cycle? We break the front end into three areas and ask tough questions that will let you grade your company and take it back to your team. This session is typically a prerequisite for the other topics as it sets the stage and gets the attendees thinking and in the right frame of mind.

- Size Matters: What is Your Load Input Number?

Most companies set sales goals each year. They typically break these goals down by customer, salesperson, territory and product. In this presentation, we'll define load input, and help you determine what your load goal needs to be for your sales team to reach its goals. It's a different way of thinking and one Brian finds most companies are not doing. You will leave this session with a roadmap to set load goals. Remember, setting sales goals is just the start.

Also covered in this presentation: Pipeline. While Pipeline is a component of Load Goals, it's critical to think of it separately. Most companies have some way of managing their pipelines, but in this session we will find out that managing the sales pipeline is not enough in today's competitive market.

- Sales KPIs for ROI

Most companies have back-end focused KPIs, or Key Performance Indicators, but are not even thinking about or monitoring front-end KPIs. This session will challenge you to think about KPIs on the front end of the sales process and walk you through a process to calculate what those KPIs should be, as well as how to manage them. You will leave this session with a process to take back to your team to create the KPIs you can focus on to grow your business.

- Profiling is OK When It Comes to Target Accounts

Many companies talk about target accounts but stop there. In this session, we will ask four simple questions that will help you profile your accounts to put them in the proper matrix to determine if they should be considered a target account. When this has been reviewed via a worksheet, we will talk about how to focus on these accounts and put in place systems to ensure your team is staying on track.

- 1+1=4: Team Selling is the Answer

Doesn't this sound good? These sessions will challenge you on the reality of your company taking a team approach to selling. What we typically find is that most companies think they are doing team selling, but in reality most companies are siloed. We will illustrate how team selling goes beyond just outside and inside sales, and why that is so important. After this session, you'll be able to go back to your organization and put into place processes to truly start "team selling."

- Business Intelligence: How to Leverage Market Demand, CRM & ERP for Growth

This session will examine how leveraging data across a company's systems can give industrial organizations a competitive edge and roadmap for their sales teams on where to spend their time.

"With this book and his system, Brian Gardner brings his unique talent for making the complex simple. He has the experience, with family business, in the world of industrial sales professionals and a full set of practical steps that will benefit all involved in their quest for winning in sales!"

– Mario Porrata-Franceschini, MRF Inc.

- CRM is Not a Four-Letter Word

CRM is not a four-letter word. It's a three-letter word. CRM stands for Customer Relationship Management. That does not sound too bad. Unfortunately, when you mention CRM, you typically get strange looks - like, don't ask me about this, or you brought up a subject that brings painful memories. During this session, Brian will discuss the good, the bad and the ugly that he has seen over the past 25 years in the industrial market. After this session, if you haven't already implemented CRM, you will have a roadmap you can focus on to do so effectively. If you are already doing CRM, you will have areas to focus on that you can take back to your team and realign. This is a condensed version of the full ROI from CRM talk.
